How to Apply for a Chinese Scholarship

Information on Studying in China for Students of all Faculties

You are a student and you are planning to spend some time abroad? Why not choose China, one of the fastest developing countries in the world?

Zhou Xiaoxia, the Chinese Co-Director of the CIUB and Associate Professor of one of Shanghai's most important Universities, ECNU, will explain everything about how to obtain a Chinese scholarship and the necessary requirements.

In the first part of her presentation Professor Zhou will introduce three different types of Scholarships: The Confucius Institute Scholarship, The Chinese Government Scholarship and The Shanghai Municipal Scholarship. While the Confucius Institute Scholarship is mainly a Language Scholarship, for the other two scholarships Chinese Language proficiency is not a prerequisite.

Some Chinese University programs, especially PhD and Master courses, are also offered in English. For students who would like to study more than a year in China, Chinese courses are normally part of the scholarship. It is possible to apply for scholarships on all levels: Bachelor-, Master-, and PhD-programs.

In the second part Professor Zhou will clarify the details on how to obtain a scholarship and its necessary qualifications. She will also explain the application procedures and the application dead lines. After the presentation there will be enough time for personal questions, which Professor Zhou will be happy to answer.
