Graduate Program PhD European Global Studies

The realities of our globalized and interconnected world call for innovative research strategies. PhD candidates in European Global Studies develop new theoretical and methodological approaches to study Europe in its manifold global connections. They learn how to operate across disciplines and receive special training to design their own cutting-edge dissertation project. Successful PhD students continue their career in academia or work in national and international administration, business, and politics.

The Graduate Program is hosted by the Institute for European Global Studies, a leading institution for interdisciplinary research and teaching. This program provides the institutional framework to pursue a PhD project in European Global Studies. Members of the Graduate Program profit from a highly inter- and transdisciplinary research environment and global platforms for multi-sited research, leading expertise in the field of digital humanities, international course offerings, and scientific exchanges with visiting fellows from all around the world.
