Master's Program in European Global Studies

In a highly interdependent world, Europe is facing social, economic and political realities that require a shift in perspective. Contemporary challenges such as migration flows, growing energy demand or revived protectionism cannot be adequately studied within the framework of national borders. What is called for instead is a global and interdisciplinary approach.

The Master's program in European Global Studies teaches methods and key concepts across a variety of disciplines such as political science, history, law and economics. Through its comprehensive perspective on Europe's role in a globalized world, it uniquely positions its graduates for careers in national and international administration, business, politics and research.
